BARRY HAMILTON LEAVING UTAH FOR NATIONAL TRIBAL RELATIONS POST

Barry Hamilton, who joined the Utah NRCS leadership in January, 2005, as an assistant state conservationist for field operations in Area III, has accepted a new position as Tribal Relations Liaison for the agency in Washington, DC. He will begin his new assignment on December 1st. His duties include providing leadership in coordinating natural resources program policy and activities to address the needs of Tribal Government and American Indians, and Alaska Natives at the local level. Barry will be the analyst for outreach to American Indians and Alaska Natives (AIAN), Tribal Government, and related organizations. He will report to the Office of the Deputy Chief for Management, Outreach and Advocacy Division, Customer Outreach Team.

Barry and his family will be moving from Price to the Washington, DC area soon and we wish them well in their new endeavors. State Conservationist Dave Brown expressed appreciation for the dedicated years of service Barry has provided for the farmers and ranchers in Utah. “He has especially made significant progress in building and maintaining relations with the Navajo and Ute Tribes in Utah. This experience will serve him well as the new National Tribal Relations Liaison for the agency,” he added.
