

Group Volunteer Opportunities are available and needed. Groups from service organizations, corporations, faith-based organizations, or personal friends have assisted with conservation projects.

A group of Earth Team volunteers and a NRCS biologist take a break from bird monitoring of the Gunnison Sage Grouse, which is being considered for the endangered species list.

NRCS volunteers plant some 250 species of native trees and shrubs into a 2,000 square foot demonstration garden.

NRCS volunteers plant trees into a riparian buffer to clean and filter water going into a nearby stream.

Earth Team volunteers install sand fencing to help beach dune habitats.

Earth Team volunteers plant native grasses to reduce beach erosion and improve wildlife habitat along an environmentally sensitive shoreline.

Boy Scout Earth Team Volunteers helped plant trees to improve wildlife habitat and the environment.