Helping People Help the Land

With the mission of "Helping People Help the Land," the Natural Resources Conservation Service (NRCS) provides products and services that enable people to be good stewards of the Nation's soil, water, and related natural resources on non-Federal lands. With our help, people are better able to conserve, maintain, or improve their natural resources. As a result of our technical and financial assistance, land managers and communities take a comprehensive approach to the use and protection of natural resources in rural, suburban, urban, and developing areas.

Conservation Assistance

Since 1935, NRCS (originally called the Soil Conservation Service, or SCS) has provided leadership in a partnership effort to help America's private land owners and managers conserve their soil, water, and other natural resources. Our guiding principles are service, partnership and technical excellence.

Our locally-based NRCS staff works directly with farmers, ranchers and others to provide technical and financial conservation assistance suited to each client's specific needs. We help landowners develop conservation plans and provide advice on the design, layout, construction, management, operation, maintenance, and evaluation of recommended, voluntary conservation practices. NRCS provides financial assistance for many conservation activities. Participation with our programs and services is voluntary. Interested farmers, ranchers and other private landowners should contact their local NRCS service center for information about available assistance.

NRCS activities also include farmland protection, upstream flood prevention, emergency watershed protection, urban conservation, and local community projects designed to improve social, economic, and environmental conditions.

NRCS conducts soil surveys, conservation needs assessments, and the National Resources Inventory to provide a basis for resource conservation planning activities and to provide an accurate assessment of the condition of the Nation's private lands.

As the leading source of technology as it applies to natural resource conservation on private lands, NRCS develops technical guides and other Web-based tools to help enhance natural resource conservation efforts.
