ABSTRACT

The National Society of Consulting Soil Scientists (NSCSS) maintains a membership from 28 states and 2 Canadian provinces. In June 2008, a hyperlink to an online professional practice survey was emailed to the organization's 251 members. The survey included twenty four questions which queried the membership primarily for demographic data, but also addressed topics concerning the economy and its impact on soil consulting and important issues facing the professional practice today. Summaries of demographic data are used to construct a profile of the typical soil consultant and characterize the consultant's company.
