

Natural Resources Conservation Service in Nevada

The Natural Resources Conservation Service (NRCS) is the federal agency of the U.S. Department of Agriculture that works with private landowners, tribes, and others to help protect natural resources. Our mission is to help people live on the land in a sustainable way.

The majority of our technical assistance is directed at helping farmers and ranchers develop conservation systems uniquely suited to their land and individual ways of doing business. Urban and rural communities seek our help to curb erosion, conserve and protect water, enhance wildlife habitat, and solve other resource problems.

NRCS field offices are located in Caliente, Elko, Ely, Fallon, Lovelock, Minden, Yerington, and Winnemucca.

The Mojave Special Projects Office is located in Las Vegas. The Lahontan Area Office is in Fallon. The NRCS State Office is in Reno.

NRCS natural resource specialists use a variety of information and tools, such as maps, surveys, engineering studies, and economic data, to answer questions and provide technical assistance.

NRCS employees are working to help ensure that the land is healthy and productive for future generations.
