

VOLUNTEER SHOWCASE

January 2013, Montana

Office Benefits from Volunteer's Computer Skills and Involvement with Local Conservation District

For more than five years, Earth Team Volunteer Pat Johnson has been a great asset to the Natural Resources Conservation Service (NRCS) in Montana, especially because of her computer skills.

She has assisted with filing, copying, directing customers, answering telephone calls and processing mailings. Johnson has also completed conservation plans, contracts and maps, and become very proficient at it.

Johnson has been with the Valley County Conservation District in Montana for 16 years, when she was originally hired as the District Administrator.

In 2006, she was hired in a temporary position with the Natural Resources Conservation Service (NRCS), while continuing work with the District. After the position ended, Johnson decided she would continue with NRCS as an Earth Team Volunteer.

Pat Johnson has been involved with the Valley County Conservation District in Montana for 16 years, and has since join NRCS as an Earth Team Volunteer.

The Earth Team is the volunteer component of the Natural Resources Conservation Service (NRCS), a USDA agency. For more about NRCS and the Earth Team, visit www.usda.nrcs.gov.
