Sheila Marshman

This is a great time for women in agriculture. The United States Department of Agriculture reports that there are over 1 million women in the United States serving as the primary and or secondary farm business operators. The increasing number of diversified, specialty, and expanding operations creates a greater demand for higher level of risk management skills in the areas of production, marketing, human resources, financial management, and legal affairs. Marshman, a college professor, farmers wife, and President of New York Agri-Women will discuss success strategies for each of the five areas of risk management.
